Conservative Nightmares About Communist Central Planning Resembles Capitalism Today

Venture capitalists, wall street, the military industrial complex, the mainstream media, billionaires, the 1%, the corporations, the Federal Reserve and communism all have one thing in common: their existence requires economic central planning. Not only is their existence sustained by central planning, these entities are the central planners. This is a concept conservatives can't understand, because they believe socialism, meaning whenever the government does something they don't like, to be communism. But increasingly our economy is resembling not only a third-world hellhole, but also the conservative nightmare they tell us only comes through socialism.

> Capitalism increasingly resembles conservative nightmares about communism: – economic stagnation and lack of innovation- a corrupt, decadent elite- unaccountable authority making decisions that impact every aspect of your life- unstoppable intrusion into the private sphere.

Mind you, I am not arguing against central planning in an economy, anymore than I would argue for a fully anarchic order. It is in the nature of human beings to form hierarchies, ones with a monopoly on violence which we call the state and ones with a interest in commerce, trade and the distribution of resources. I am simply arguing that capitalism has central planning and that it's central planning is oppressive to the very people whom it purports to make free. The solution to communism is not capitalism, nor to capitalism communism, but an economic system that is not sustained by debt, wage slavery, mass pollution, global migration, endless growth, profit over people, open borders, the erasure of a leisure class, the explosion of third-world birth rates, and the inevitable formation of a cosmopolitan monied oligarchy. Oh, but this is not real capitalism? Yes, in the same way that the Soviet Union was not real communism.
